Brunswick, Ohio – The U.S. Army has issued a contract modification to ICS Laboratories to accommodate the performance testing and assessment of protective eyewear for the Army's Elite Special Forces. ICS will be testing all functional aspects of the combat eye protector systems inclusive of; ballistics protection, laser protection, chemical resistance, flammability resistance and various optical performance attributes.

In addition to being the U.S. Army's principle testing facility for all combat eye protector systems for the last several years, ICS has been a principle resource in testing eyewear for the United Kingdom, German, Canadian, and NATO forces.
