ANSI Approves New Revision of Z87.1 Standard

Brunswick, Ohio – The American National Standards Institute (ANSI) has approved the 2010 revision of ANSI Z87.1 – American National Standard for Occupational and Educational Personal Eye and Face Protection Devices. Dale Pfriem, ICS President and Individual Expert to the ANSI Z87.1 committee commented simply that “Eye and Face protective device suppliers and users will find the new ANSI Z87.1 standard revised in terms of technical requirements and in format - those familiar with the standard, especially over a series of past revisions, may not immediately take to the new flow and format.” The last revision to the ANSI Z87.1 Standard was in 2003 - a revision of the standard in which Mr. Pfriem was also an independent expert to the committee. Consistent with their objective to provide clients with current state-of-the-art testing and conformity assessment services, ICS will offer assessment services to this new revision of the standard.
