

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
May 4, 2005

CONTACT:
Shelley Brady-Capota

ICS Laboratories Receives Special Recognition from U.S. Army for Outstanding Support

Brunswick, OH – ICS Laboratories received the U.S. Army's Certificate of Appreciation for Outstanding Support under an award contract for testing and functional performance verification of soldier's ballistic protective eyewear. Special Forces Lieutenant Colonel David P. Anderson, Product Manager of Clothing and Equipment confirmed the nomination of ICS as made by Harold Moody, Director of Individual Armor for the U.S. Army. Operations V.P. Keith Whitten, manager of the Army project was personally recognized along with his staff for their work receiving the Bronze Recognition Coin of Colonel Norwood.

The ceremony was presided by Major Dean Bancroft, the Army's Vision Conservation Officer and Director Harold Moody, whom within their presentation stated that: "ICS Labs has proven to be a cooperative, responsible, reliable test facility - and has been critical to the successful fielding of Combat Eye Protection." Dale Pfriend, founder and President of ICS Labs stated in appreciation: "I could not have imagined this happening to our laboratory 10 years ago. Doing this work for the Army has been rewarding in itself every time we hear news or see images of a soldier's eyesight that was saved. To receive this distinction for our work, I am truly honored."